Executive Council For Sudan

promulgated an ordinance, establishing an Executive Council and Legislative Assembly for the Sudan, "in accordance with the Government's -determination to-,do everything possible to help the Sudanese towards selfgovernment".

Today's annuancement was contained in a special issue of the

The Sudan Governor-General, on British Government advice. had decided to promulgate it. ordinance without Egyptian approval. The promulgation had been delayed till now because of Egyptian objections.

The eventual agreement be the Budan would presumably open the door for a resumption of negotiations of the 1936 Anglo-Egyptian treaty, which broke down in January last

The Independent Arable newspaper Akhbar El Yom reported in Cairo earlier today that Ahmed Krasba Pasha, Egypt's Foreign Minister, had resigned because the Egyptians and not accepted the Sudan proposals.

Egyptian Claim

The proposals were rejected by the Egyptian Senate after an agreement had been reached between Krasba Posha and Sir Ronald Campbell, British Ambassador at Cairo. The Sudan is under Anglo-Egyptian rule, Egypt last January rejected a draft plan for the Sudan, drawn up by the Sudan Administration and agreed to by Britain. This plan proposed a closer association of the Sudanese with the central Government as a step May Erupt towards self-government.

The Egyptians, "under their rallying cry of Unity of the Nile Valley." have maintained that the Budan should come under the jurisdiction of the Egyptian Crown. Britain, on the other hand, has maintained that the Sudanese are not yet ready for complete selfgovernment and that when they eventually do govern themselves, they should choose for themselves whether or not they wish to be associated with Britain or Egypt.

MQYEMENT OF CAPITAL SAID TO BE CONTRARY TO ANTI-SMUGGLING TREATY

Nanking, June 19. China feels Hong Kong is not abiding by the recent anti-smuggling pact and may shortly demand a change in the status of that British Crown Colony if the illegal flight of Chinese capital does not cease, an unimpeachable Government source told. United Press today.

China considers the movement of capital assets, particularly from Kwangtung and Shanghai, to be "smuggling" in contravention of the treaty concluded in Nanking a few months ago which enjoins both parties to cooperate to prevent smuggling either way.

tween the two countries over This source said one of China's chief economic ills today is the relentless flight of capital from North China to Shanghai followed by eventual sceping across the Kwangtung border into thriving Hong Kong.

He told United Press that ernment with sufficient authority the Chinese Government feels to curb smuggling. the Hong Kong authorities are not copperating sufficiently in stamping out this "drainage of China's lifeblood" at a time when this nation's fate hangs in the balance.

The Chinese Government, he sald, fully realises that an outright demand that Hong Kong be incorporated in China will probably be flatly turned down by the United Kingdom and that, a similar result is likely if China takes the case to Lake

He said this will be due to the number of votes Britain is believed able to muster in a pinch.

READER'S

Sir,-The article "The Anti-American Agitation" in your, last weeks' Issue drew forth a most virulent attack from Simple Simon in the "China Mail" on its writer Mr. H. G. W. Woodhead and on America. I would gladly have left Simple Shnon to a thoroughly deserved thrashing from Mr. Woodhead and from. the fact that he has thought fit to use China and the Chinese as the theme for his vituperations, and talk a lot, of rubbish about theri, And this, as a truth-loving Chinese, I connot let pass.

Let me start with the assumption that Simple Simon is an Engishmun, .1. may be, wrong; but Fee, Fi, Fo, Fum, I smell the smell of a bad Englishman-as pungent as malignant B.O. If, then, Simple tounon is indeed penny-ha'penny Englishman what right has he to say that Mr. Woodhend has been given considerable space, week after wook, in your columns to vent his hatred against China and the Chinese, when I, a hundred-per cent Chinese National, do not regard Mr. Woodhead's writings as anything but very accurate diagnoses of China's multifarious ills, * | made and given with the sincere. * hope and intention that those Kolynos Dental Cream * who would cure her would know where to begin and what physics to administer?. Those who condemn us do not always hate us, and those who censure us are not necessarily our enemies. And by token of the saying of Confucius; "How fortunate am I: whenever I commit an error, my friends immediately point it out to me," I de Oliveria and Mr. James F. may say that Mr. Woodhead has Whelan, of H.M. OBJECTIONS AGREEMENT **************

Washington, June 18. The British, French, Danish and Swedish Ambassadors in Washington today-reported_back_to. their respective Governments on yesterday's intensive conference with the State Department on the controversial issue of the Marshall aid bilateral agreements.

They requested further instructions both from the office of European' Economic Cooperation in Paris and their own Governments on the various compromises suggested by Mr. Willard Thorp, The Polish Ambassador, Jozef the Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, on the passages in the draft agree- tary of State, contending that the ment to which the European countries strongly

In the meantime, some more details of the draft agreement to which the European nations are vigorously objecting were disclosed by authoritative sources.

Some of these objections arise from the American insistence that more or less the same agreement be signed by all 16 nations. One article provides that each country should allow the Congression. al Marshall Plan "watchdog" committee full liberty of movement inside its borders.

To any country which guarantees personal liberty at least as fully as the United States such provision is considered oblectionable.

"Most Favoured"

American officials have argued that this provision is purely neademit, as it is really meant for countries such as Greece and

Since it is the bilateral agreements that are under negotiations, it is felt that there is no reason for insisting on the insertion of such a clause in all of he agreements.

Britain and the others are understood to be joining in objecting to a provision whichwould bind the 16 nations to give "most favoured nation" treatment to Germany and

This would mean they would have to grant these occupied areas as favourable trade terms as they grant to any other nation. European officials consider that such a provision has no place in an agreement which concerns European rehabilitation

The question of a termination date is another controversial one. It. is specified that the United States can end her side of the programme whenever the President sees fit. There is no such "release" for the European na-

In dealing with Communist infiltration it is extremely difficult to judge the exact psychological moment at which repression must be employed to frustrate anarchy and disorder. The music is used to express the idea or sense of the words beautifully and truly, so that you can feel them as well as understand them.

Perhaps people are afraid of poetry because they think they have to do a lot of things at once in hearing the music and understanding the sense. But some of the best poems are very simple; their words are everyday words, arranged in a clear pattern.

So there are at least three different kinds of enjoyment to be found in poetry. Here is a suggested method to use in helping you to find them:

Read some of the ballad poems like "Sir Patrick Spens." The "tune" of these is very easy, with the second and fourth lines rhyming, with four beats in the first of the other two. You could cription to this pattern yourself. Then look out for words which help you to see the picture of what happened.

Now read some poems with more difficult pattern. (Poetry is printed so that you can see the pattern as well as hear it.) Notice which lines rhyme and acc how the "beats" or accented syslables are arranged. Read the poems out loud. You cannot to too much of this, because verse is essentially a hearing, musical thing.

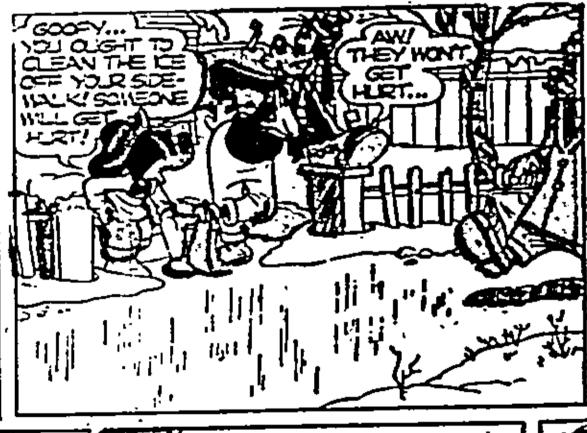

You may not always be able to find out the pattern, especially, with some poetry that has inc rhymes. But try altering the words about and you will most likely discover that the ones the Read Coleridge's poem, . "The poet used sound much more suit-

She watched the boat, approach with, with planks of wood and other growing curiosity. Billy stared vacantly at the boat, which now appeared more like a narrow barge packed high odd pieces of cargo than a Viking ship. And there was an engine, but no oarsmen. She could hear the engine throbbing as she turned her gaze on to a large man, in rubber boots and a shabby brown velvet suit.

"Aye, but I'll drag yer on with on!" went on the man in a booming voice.

The Skating Contest

There was once in Switzerland a skating contest. Anyone who won the races and figure skatmg would be given a pair of skates, a silver cup and £100.

A little girl named Mary Sullivan, who had a very sick mother, decided to enter the contest to win the £100 to buy medicine which would cure her mother. Her mother and she lived in a lonely cottage by the hillside, and they were very poor. Mary had a very good chance of winning. because she skated and ski-ed every day. As she had not enough money to pay her school rees; she could not go to school.

The day of the contest fell in January. Mary put on her skates l and entered the circle where all T the other skaters (who were much older than she) were.

First came the figure skating. Mary was first to show the Judges what she could do. After the others had finished their demonstrations, the results were announced. Mary was very pleased, because she had won the figure shating.

Then came the races. Mary was first right through until she was forced to a standstill. The ice was breaking in front of her. She leapt over, and dashed forward. Mary was now second. and she put all her effort into beating Joan, who was first, and who afterwards ended third. As Mary came level with Joan she made an effort, dashed straight ferward, and won.

Everyone cheered. She 'received her prizes after having tea with the Judges, and then, went straightway to buy medicine for her mother, who was cured three days after taking it.

Announcements of Prizewinners Dear boys and girls,

Now that we have gone into two-colours, we have to print the Children's Herald earlier each week than we usually do. That means that, when competitions are published in future, the results will not appear until the week after the closing date, instead of, as previously, on the following Sunday.

. For the same reason, all Birthday Greetings will have to be in from now on at least two weeks before you want them published. Don't forget that, will you? Otherwise we .cannot announce your birth. day until after it is over!

We will have a new competition for you next week, and you will see then how the sys-.tem works.

"Roses red." Now, do not rush it; there is plenty of time. Dwell a little on "violets" and enjoy the word. Then light upon "blue": go gently with the "bl" and lengthen to "oo" sound just enough to emphasise its music. Now take a line of your own finding, and stress, hold on to, or lengthen the words; or part of them, to your own choice. Make you own music with your own voice. Speak high, speak low, speak softly or loudly, lengthen your sounds, shorten them...play with them and come to delight in them. Let the sense take care of itself for the moment. Dwell upon the sound of the poetry you read. Be all ears.

He Nearly Became A King And His American Bride A Queen

NOW HE GETS SIX THOUSAND A YEAR TO STOP A WAR

Out of a Dutch place, and into the glare of a Middle East aerodrome, there stepped a tall, dark-haired mancharged with the world's trickiest job.

The plane, appropriately, bore the emblem of the Red Cross, symbol of mercy and healing. And he had come, indeed, to call for mercy in a place of bloodthirsty hate and for healing in that land of deep wounds which is called Palestine.

He was Count Folke Bernadotte, and what he had been told, in effect, was this: "Britain has failed. America has | failed. The -United Nations Organisation has so far failed. Now you have a go-make peace between the Aratis and the Jews!"

Well Trusted

One can imagine that he thought it over deeply, this thinfaced man with the serious eyes; intelligently, methodically, and calmly. But finally, in that quiet manner of his which gives the impression to those who don't know him that he is aloof and even cold, he agreed. The chances of success he reckoned at about 100 to 1. But he felt it his duty to try.

That fiery, dashing warrior, the dark Gascon of the same name who became a Marshal of France under Napoleon, and later ruler of Sweden. must be looking down in astonishment to see one of his line as the world's best negotiator of peace and good will.

For wherever there is work of that kind they are inclined to call in Folke Bernadotte. During the war it was he who interceded to alleviate the lot of Norwegian and Danish deportees in German hands; it was he to whom they turned to undertake difficult negotiations for the mutual neturn of seriously wounded. Allied and German soldiers and sailors.

And when the supremely delicate task arose of negotiating for an armistice behind Hitler's back, it was Bernadotte, implicitly trusted even by the suspicious Himmler, who carried out the work.

He Likes Work

He is in many, ways quite an ordinary sort of chap — he smokes and drinks in moderation and likes a rame of bridge-but he has a good brain, is an excellent organiser, and, above all, inspires in people an unshakeable belief in his good faith and integrity. Everybody trusts "Folkie."

His falary in Palostine will be £6.500 a year, plus expenses. In fact, however, this unassuming man will hardly be interested, if at all, in the money angle. For one day in 1927, in the sunshine of Monte Carlo, he met a pretty American girl called Estelle Manville. He fell in love and married her the following year in ... New York. She was the daughter of Edward H. Manville, the asbestos millionaire, and they say the wedding day cost about £150,000 one way and another.

Now many men might have been content to sit back and enjoy life. As the son of Prince Oscar Bernadotte and the nephew of King Gustav V. of Sweden, he doubtless had plenty of opportunity to confine himself to the social round.

But Bernadotte was not made that way. He likes work, and when necessary can work 20 hours a day. So he interested himself in the Swedish

JOHN BINGHAM

Red Cross and in the youth of his country. Today, after years of devoted work, he is president of the former and is head of the Scout movement in Sweden. He speaks perfect; French, German, and English. There' was a time, back in 1929, when he nearly became a king and his young American bride a queen. That was during a period when the creation of a Baltic kingdom was under serious consideration.

The kingdom would have comprised Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania, all now engulfed within the Soviet domains; one may think that the statesmen of those lands are now regretting that they did not accept the rule of the good and wise Count Bernadotte, the man of neace. It might have made quite a difference to them -and Europe.

During his work in Britain and Germany during the war he-was bombed by both sides: by the Luitwaffe when he was in London and by the R.A.F. in Berlin. The latter experience was when the Swedish Legation went up in flames.

No Hatred

But one incident during the long-drawn-out tragedy of the war must have filled him, one feels, with a number of soft memories and perhaps a certain feeling of pride. When he went to America to marry Estelle Manville he travelled in the s.s. Gripsholm, and during the war it was this ship of happy memories which conveyed large numbers of seriously wounded British troops back to their homes, for which end Bernadotte himself had worked long and hard.

There has been a certain amount of tragedy in his family life for of his four children two died while quite young. Perhaps sadness served merely to strengthen his resolve to help mankind, where he could; heightened his sympathy for others who might be 'suffering."

Thus, though he cannot condemn and despise too strongly the Nazi hierarchy, he feels no hatre to ax for those whom he terms "the unhappy German people." Which is, after all, strictly according to Christian ethics.

Now, at 53, he is head of a mission of 11 in Palestin, interposing his ,cool, slightly aloof personality between the hotheads of both sides. He has gone there not because he needed money, nor because he fancied the job - who would? - but because he felt it was his duty.

History book for Martians

When the Bolonians and the Frenzians had fought themselves to complete exhaustion in their fifth disastrous ideological war for living space and the right to enjoy freedom from fear, only 24 human beings out of a combined population of 280,000,000 remained to tell the tale.

By a miracle of Providence these 24 were the Cabinet Ministers of both countries, and so an honourable peace was quickly concluded, for it was mutually agreed by the survivors that, as non-combatants, it would be a serious breach of International Law were they to take up arms against each other.

Thereafter for many years the Bolonians and the Frenzians existed side by side in perfect amity, surrounded by plenty of empty living space and enjoying complete freedom from fear, until one by one they died from natural causes. Upon these sad occasions it was the custom to bury the departed with great pomp and ceremony, wrapt in the flags of both countries, irrespective of his place of origin. The sole exception to this custom was the last survivor of these two great peoplesthe Minister of War for Bolonia-who, having no one to inter him with the full military honours that were his due, suffered the great indignity of being eaten by an animal.

Today Bolonia and Frenzia are vast, barren, waste-lands populated exclusively by the white ant and the rattwo creatures whose amazing fecundity, voracious appetite, and insatiable desires for living space bring them into constant conflict with each other.

Which of the two, if either, will survive is still a moot point in the opinion of Modern Science—an aged, root-eating Scot who exists precariously in a fetid | subterranean cavern in what used to be called Surrey.

Paranoias of the world, unite!

"Before we can plan successfully for a great nation we must first have unity."

of purpose."

—A Planner Tells All.

We often say that the only way to achieve this unity of purpose is to have a shipload of planners who will travel around the globe with their families and concentrate on a binding understanding which will lay the foundation stone for an international master-plan embracing all aims and policies.

The rest, we think, is merely a matter of endless speeches and targets. Among the more obvious proposals, which readily occur to us are the following:

1. The establishment of adequate pools for assembling and maintaining more and more planners to co-ordinate and utilise existing economic resources.

2. The appointment of committees and sub-committees and commissions to consider the setting up of international courts of appeal for the quick settlement of disputes among bickering planners of all nations.

3. Relief and assistance in rehabilitating distressed and needy planners who have been broken on the wheels of universal co-operation and multilateral planning.

4. World zoning of all essential commodities by massed boards of highly paid resident expert planners, who-will allot to the workers an equal minimum share of sanctioned consumer goods sufficient for their needs.

(Global Planned Fairness.)
Only thus, we think, can the success of total democratic security be achieved before the next war starts and the world made a safe and pleasant temporary place for planners to plan in. (The Fifth and Final Freedom.)

The Scottish Spring Congress at Gleneagles scoring was mostly in "victory" points. The two big events were both won by the Kempson-Mathieson-Pavlides-Rayne team, the Scottish runners-up being close on their heels. One of the team's luckiest hands was the following:

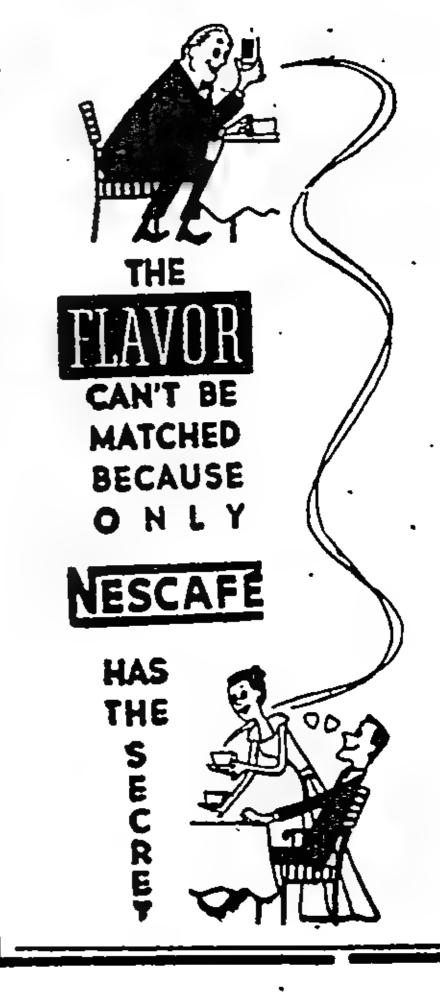

In one room, after competitive bidding, West (of the winning team) was allowed to play the hand in Four Spades undoubled. He made only seven tricks, losing 200 points after deducting honours. The defenders, found the best play: trick (1) King of Clubs, (2) a small Diamond ruffed by South, (3) King of Hearts covered with the Ace and ruffed, (4) another ruff in Diamonds followed by two winning Hearts. A contract in Diamonds would have been more profitable.

In the other room the bidding proceeded: West 1 S. North 2 C! East Pass, South 2 H. West 2 S. North Pass, East Pass, South 4 H! West Pass, North Pass, East Double and all pass. Opponents made only tricks, two in Spades and the Ace of Hearts.

The contract could have been defeated by super imaginative play: trick (1) a Club led and lost. (2) a trump taken with the Ace. (3) King of Spades. (4) small Spade ruffed (East has either the Queen or ruffs). (5) a Club ruffed defeating the contract.

This hand helped the winners to defeat their 47 rivals in the competition for the "Daily Record's" (Challenge) Cup, the principal event of the Spring Congress. In previous years the Cup was won by Scottish teams, but this did not reduce the applause given to this year's non-Scottish winners.

Talking about Files.

THIS UNHAPPY By Fred Majdalany

People often write to me asking how they can become screen writers. What are the qualifications? How do they begin?

My answer is always simple. You become a screen writer by accident or by previous success in another field of writing.

The chief qualifications (apart from some ability to write) are inexhaustible patience, indifference to personal pride, a streak of masochism.

All writing is a form of slavery—only bad writers find it easy—but screen writers seem to meet with more unkindness and frustration than any other writers.

'Their work is well rewarded (the best dozen or so make between £3,000 and £5,000 a year) but unrewarding, for the writer is still regarded in most studios as a necessary nuisance.

His job is to provide something on paper which others can muck about. His opinion at a story conference rates somewhat lower than that of the chief wigmaker or some young man who helps with the lighting.

As soon as he hands in his script it is given to a succession of other writters to "improve." They feel bound to make several changes in order to justify their salaries.

He is discouraged from writing original screen plays because the exhibitors, who find the money for production, want to play safe with adaptations of already well-known works.

Hence the lack of really cinematic writing. Hence the number of adaptations of novels and plays which don't work out on the screen. Hence the unhappy expression on the face of the writer who could do it if they'd only let him.

Hence, too, the conclusion of the shrawder ones that the only answer is to become directors and producers.

Launder and Gillist, Powell and Pressburger, and some others make films of more distinctive quality because they were writers first and still do their own writing, as well as producing and directing.

These production teams are the ideal film-making units. But they are still the exception. There is no doubt that the standard of the average picture will not improve until the writer is given more scope, more standing, and more authority to finish his work himself.

Anyone who wishes to examine this subject in further detail should read an article by Guy Morgan in the current "Penguin Film Revue."

Mr. Morgan is the hon, sec. of the Screenwriters' Association, and his article summarises the views of 50 leading British practitioners on the humiliations and sufferings they endure to put words into the mouths of your Grangers and Lockwoods.

Specimen bitternesses: (1) "....the pathetic belief that "The Last Supperwould have been better if painted by nine artists." (2) "He (the writer) is as powerless (through lack of authority) to avert an aria, an earthquake or a happy ending as he would be in real life."

The only new offering in the West End is a gloomy little study in degeneracy called 'Deep Valley'

It dwells squalidly on the misfortunes of the Sauls, a family of three who exist rather than live in a tumbledown Californian shack like something in "Tobacco Road."

Maw, who has married beneath her, consoles herself for this error by staying permanently in bed and declining to speak to Paw.

Paw retaliates by giving up shaving, washing, work, and decency.

The daughter, Libby, lives in terror of them both, stammers badly, and is more animal than girl.

Paw thinks it would be a good idea to promote a romance between his daughter and the lengineer in charge of a road that is being built near their home. The engineer, like Barkis, is willin'. But Libby prefers one of the convicts working on the road.

The convict adds to his murder rerord by doing in one of the police guards, and when he escapes to the woods Libby follows him there and helps him to hide.

It turns out that he is the nicest chap imaginable, but he just can't help killing people when he is angry. Libby continues to be sorry for him right up to the moment he dies in her arms, riddled by the bullets of his pursuers.

The effect of all this, surprisingly, is to bring about a big reconciliation between Maw and Paw. Proving, I suppose, that degeneracy has a silver lining. Even in California.

Some excellent acting by Ida Lupino fails to mitigate what is a painful piece of entertainment.

Record Number Of British Films

One of Britain's leading group of film studios— the Arthur Rank organisation— is releasing 60 new full length films during the 12 months from October. This compares with 26 during the previous 12 months and sets up a record.

This increased rate of output is being achieved by improving producyorid.

"The programme was treated as a combined operation involving over half a dozen producing companies. If a company was ready with a film and its own studio space was occupied it did not wait. We found space in other studios," Mr. Rank said.

This fine achievement by but one of Britain's several film producing organisations shows with what vigour and success British pictures are catering for world entertainment. After they have been seen in Britain all these new films will be shown in other countries including extensive screening in the United States.

Prince Of Wizards

Abarcioning the accumulated decorum of centuries, Prince Metternich, Austrian Ambassador in the Court of Napoleon III., dropped on all-fours and plunged beneath the table-cloth.

For a moment his head emerged. With the sharp request "No jokes, if you please!" he promptly disappeared again.

The remarkable series of mysterious happenings, which caused the haughtiest diplomat of his day to behave at a Court party in this unconventional and unexpected fashion, centred around a young American of Scottish descent named Daniel Dunglas Home, who during the lifties of the last century invaded and conquered Europe.

Aristocratic and royal personages were proud to entertain him. It was rumoured that the Emperor and Empress of France sought his advice on questions of high politics. He married a charming and distinguished Russian girl; and, though he always declined to accept payment for the services he rendered, the jewels he collected would have done credit to any reigning actress.

Dazzled All

The famous medium was, in fact, a social adventurer of unsurpassed ability. Like Count Cagliostro, whom he somewhat resembled, he possessed either great psychic gifts or astonishing powers of a hypnotic kind, which over a period of many years enabled him to dazzle and delude every audience with whom he came in contact.

At his touch the ordinary laws of the physical universe seemed to be suspended. He was the prince of tableturners, and at the seances he organised massive pieces of furniture, not content with timidly tilting or tentatively tapping, rose boldly, into the air or rushed across the room as if driven by a hurricane.

Strange sounds were apt to fill the air—unearthly aerial music or a noise compared by observers to "the wailing cry or note of a wild duck." Ghostly hands and arms materialised from nowhere, presented flowers, brushed cheeks, or twitched at ladies petticoats.

But the oddest behaviour was that of the medium himself. A large number of onlookers on numerous occasions were convinced that they had seen him rise from the floor and hover near the ceiling.

Three sober English gentlemen declared that they had watched him slide from a window high above a London street and glide in at another. To the gift of levitation he appended the even more surprising gift of adding a foot or so to his stature, while admirers stood and measured him:

No wonder that Prince Metternich determined to solve the problem of animated mahogany, crept beneath the table-cloth.

Still A Secret

Both to students of human psychology and to lovers of historical mystery I recommend Jean Burton's biography of Home, entitled "Heyday of a Wizard."

An absorbing and entertaining book, it is in some respects, nevertheless, a trifle disappointing. For the biographer has made no real effort to clear up the central enigma of her hero's personality. Charlatan or wizard? Or something of both?

Robert Browning considered him afraud and caricatured him savagely in "Mr. Sludge, the Medium"; but other observers of unusual shrewdness and intelligence believed that the majority of his feats were absolutely genuine. During his lifetime Daniel Home was never caught out. Metternich löcked in vain for him en springs on trip-doors. His blographer, too has failed to fathum Mr. Shadge's secret.

- Murder Straight

"The Dancing Detective," by William Irish; (Hutchinson) is a book for those who like their-murder straight;

William Irish has established a reputation, both in his short stories and longer novels, as a purveyor of suspense. The strain that runs through all his stories is the man-in-the-street, murder-might-happen-to-anybody idea—hardly a comforting thought. In "The Dancing Dective" this strain becomes the main theme, as perfectly ordinary people get theniselves involved—up to their necks.

The first four stories—The Dancing Detective. Two Fellows in a Furnished Room, The Light in the Window and Silent as the Grave—are murder plus sheer horror. The next four are for more general reading—The Detective's Dilemma, in particular, poses a beautiful problem in who-dumnits. The Fur Jacket is the weakest of the collection—it has the taint of a Sunday magadine-story trick ending.

To the person who grouped these stories must go the greatest credit. He starts the off with a romance-murder, works up to a climax with the low-keyed, horrible "Silont as the Grave," and then goes down the scale again hy way of impersonal interest, who-dunnit and humour.

Read this book right through to the end and you will enjoy it. Leave it halfway at 12 p.m. and you won't sleep nights. ("The Dancing Detective (William Irish). Hutchinson & Co.)

bleby. (Hodder and Stoughton: 9s. 6d.)
Another exceedingly competent novel, based on much the same formula as that employed by Cecil Roberts. Five storm-bound travellers—each for very good reasons desperately anxious to reach England—wield up the secret of their private problems, and provide a alimpse of the personality that lurks beneath their Service dress.

Myself When Young, by Henry Handel Richardson, (Heinemann, 10, 6d.)

The famous Australian woman novelist who published under the name of Henry Handel Richardson tells the story of her childhood and youth. A pleasant, unpretending simply written norrative.

Life Story, by Phyllis Bentley. (Gollancz, 10s. 6d.)

Another novel of the West Riding by a writer whose love of her subject and knowledge of her craft do not, at least so far as I am concerned, quite make up for the lack of more imaginative qualities.

HIS OWN HILLS

By FRANK OWEN

High on a hill in Derbyshire sits George Bates, 38, married, with two daughters, ex-private soldier of the Fourteenth Army. He is engaged in tearing a large part of the hill to pieces.

George is what they call an opencast miner. He does not dig under the earth for the precious coal. He digs . into it.

Open-cast mining, in a word, consists not in delving for coal but in ploughing for it. The furrow which George drives, however, is not 2ft. deep; it is 200ft, deep.

In this process George is assisted by a number of invaluable, and indispensable, aids.

Take his own particular pick and shovel. It weighs 150 tons; shifts five tons of earth at a load; shifts it every 55 seconds for ten hours at time; costs £35,000. Quite a shovel.

It is called a walking drag-line ex-

Walking because when George gets too near to the chasm he is creating (or, rather, when his chasm approaches too closely to George), he pulls another set of levers.

Then his monster rises from its base, hoists itself on to a pair of giant steel crutches—and literally walks away at the rate of half a mile an hour.

Drag-line axcavator because it claws up the soil which lies atop of the coal seams (which lie at varying depths, interspersed with layers of further soil, shale, and rock).

The giant 135ft, jib of this coal-getting crane carries at its extremity a bucket, or cradle, with steel claws.

The cradle swings far out over the void below the ledge on which George is precariously perched in his narrow control cabin (it is about the size of a lorry's cab).

Down drops the cradle, as a plummet. It clutches the earth, catches it, hauls in more as it drags its way back up towards George on his cliff.

He slams down a lever, and the soilladen cradle soars into the sky. He stamps his foot, and the giant digger suddenly swerves on a 90-degree turn.

Moonlight Shift

They call the open-cast miners "sunshine miners," because they work in the open air, under heaven.

If you had to be a miner no double you would choose to be of this kind (it's fine in summer, though when winter gales how around the open workings it's not such fun; underground, at least, it's anug).

In fact, sunshiners is a misnomer, or, at best, a "semi-misnomer." For open-cast mining goes on in Britain both day and night.

George, for instance, is a moonlighter. His shift begins at 10 p.m., and ends at 8 a.m.

It was gone midnight when I drove up the hill. The crescent moon hing as a pendant under a single star. The rest of the sky was as black as an inverted bowler hat.

Over the crest a glow came up out of the earth. This was George digging while England slept. He and his monster were already 80ft, below the lie of the land, burrowing another 120ft, towards Old Nick.

The great steel-framed jib was underslung with four huge 1,000-watt searchlights playing on his workings.

Far down the man-made valley of the moonlight miners other lamps swayed and pitched, and in their heams there rose the smoke of dieseldriven lorries, furiously carting away coal or soil.

Coal? Yes. For here they have got down to the next coal seam itself.

Furiously? Yes. For every open-cast miner is on piece-work or bonus.

George himself, who toils a 10-hour five-day week, draws about £15.

The inside of George's monster is warm and clean. It is about 30ft wide by 45ft long, about 10ft high. The most impressive piece of mechanism is the giant main gear round which revolves the steel-hoist rope of 110yds, which flings that huge 5-ton cradle round the Derbyshire hills.

Our Serial Story

THE AUSTRALIAN BEST SELLER

THESE ARE MY PEOPLE

I decided to seek unmetalled roads further on. We urged, the horses over the divide, then wandered north, pulling up at houses tucked in trees, hoping for a message; stepping quietly on the sawdust-covered floors of grocery shops that smelt of coffee, bacon and earthy potatoes, to enquireif the white-approned proprietor had friends in the Middle East; drinking tea with men who left their swags beside the door while they clambered in to dine with us; hailing farmers plodding behind teams of horses in paddocks open wide to the sun, until one day we pulled on to a rise overlooking a creek clad in a skirt of reeds.

The sweat had dried It was hot. in grey streaks down the horses' sides. I hobbled and turned them loose in a small enclosure by the bridge. It contained patches of green grass thriving in moist places. Skirting the water the growth was lush and high. This meant a saving in chaff, and I regarded it as an ideal camp.

There was a gap into the enclosure which I closed with two strands of rope.

The horses, clammy with sweat, nosed the drier parts; then, with bent front legs, tottered in a half-turn, till, with a grunt, they went down in a roll.

I watched them, hoping they would go right over. A drover told me the horse that rolls completely over will bring an "extra quid." In any case, I never feel satisfied if a horse only rolls on one side. I miss the sense of achievement that passes to me when the horse, after several attempts, teeters on his backbone before completing tne roll.

Morgan rolled on one side, then got to his feet and went down again to roll on the other. I felt certain this would make him worth "two ex"

N'nt morning we rose to - horseless day of dust and heat. They were gone. The curves of the sagging ropes I had used for a gute were touching the ground.

My father, hi of I bushman, ho I often -talked to me about the days when he had to track his wan icraig hories. I felt that the ability to do this would most certainly be inhecited by his son. I did a quick Sherlock Holmes survey, then announced the result to Ohve.

"Both horses are hobbled," I said, as if I had discovered this by observation. ' They have made south fit a walk and I'm going after thear."

I learned later that they had galloped in the opposite direction but at the ploment I had faith in my-inheritance. I slung the winkers over my shoulder with a piece of rope and hailed an elderly man driving a covered waggon. He had a face like a gum nut and his black eyes surveyed me merrily. "Another cripple, ch!" he said checrfully, as I placed my crutches beside him and swung on to the seat.

"That's what they call us." I said, noticing his misshapen foot. "How do you like the term?" He chuckled. "It always makes me feel a bloody fool."

"In what why?" I asked him, as his old Lorse moved into a jogging trot.

"There's cripples and cripples," he said. "but there's a hell of a lot of idiots cripples and it's given us a bad name. Where ya goin'?" he added.

"I've lost two horses." I said 🤏 think they made back this way."

"Where were they bred " "I couldn't say."

By ALAN MARSHALL

"Pity. That's where they'll make for. Always tie your horses up at night." "I'll do that from now on."

"You being on crutches, should always tiee 'em up!"

"Good Lord!" I exclaimed. "Now you're talking like a chap who doesn't understand being crippled." He laughted softly to himself.

"Yair, that's how they all talk, ain't it? 'Look out,' they say, 'you'll hurt yourself.' A fat lot of hurtin' you get from being crippled. All the hurtin' I've had I got from bein' to careful"

I kept thinking about my horses. "Surely they will be round the next bend," I said. 'They were hobblec. They couldn't go very far."

"Hobbles won't stop 'em." He waved his whip, "How do you feel like in a row?"

"A row?" I said, puzzled. "Yes. Say a bloke's gonna dong you, what do you feel like?"

"I don't feel too good. In fact, I feel very bad!"

"That's the trouble with cripples. They don't like being hit. If a bloke don't mind being hit, he's jake. Nothin' can touch him if he don't mind being hit. He's a king. Now I don't mind being hit, but once I did."

"I'd like to hear about that," I said. "Well, it's like this-come on, Katie. Giddup. It's like this: If you was out in a paddock with a bull and there's a fence near and the bull comes at you, but you can run, would you care?"

"No." "I wouldn't, either. But you'd care now, wouldn't you on the sticks like you are?"

"Of course," I said. "I couldn't get away." "But your mind's the same, ain't it? You're the same crippled as you would be not crippled."

"Yes, but in the first case you are not afraid of being hurt; in the second case, you are."

"Yes, an' that's just what I'am tellin' ya. It's only our body you're worried over, and our bodies ain't worth worryin' over. I don't worry over mine. And for hy? Because I was in a paddock with a bull and when he came at me I was scared stiff on account of me being crippled. Then it came over me all of a sudden, what's it matter?-and I stopped being frightened and the buil stopped a yard from me."

"That would take nerve," I murmur-

"Not as much as you'd think," said the man. "Now, when a bloke goes to hit me, I laugh at him because I hurt. He might smash somethin', but that's nothin'."

"No, that's nothing," I said.

"Of course it ain t. Never be frightened of bein' hit."

We drove in silence for a while. The road played leaping over little hills. The drooping grey box that skirted the road drowsed in the heat.

"What's this anti something? Against Jews, it is. You know."

"Anti-semitism," I said. "Yes, that. Now that's a terrible thing, but the Jews will beat it some of 'bein' hit. That's what makes 'em great. You can't hurt what they are thinkin'."

"Their spirit?"

"Yes, that's it."

"Yes, that's it," I repeated; then, after a silence: "You do a man good." "Fancy that!" he said, interested. "It just shows you!"

"You walk on crutches, do you?" "No. I walk sort of cock-eyed. I go up and down on one side. I tried crutches once, but they made me redraw under the arms."

"You've got to stick at it." I said. "You get tough after awhile.".

"I could stick all right," he said, "but I sort of thought that taking to crutches was giving in like. You look worse than you are, when you're on crutches." .

"You are like a man who would sooner go round hálfblind than wear glasses."

"Strike me pink!" he exclaimed, astonished by the revelation of a mistaken attitude.

He spat over the side of the cart, then jerked the reins as if a more resolute gait from the jogging horse was necessary to harmonise with his thoughts.

"What would a pair of crutches cost?" "About thirty bob."

"I'll get a pair."

The waggon bumped over a railway crossing. The main street of a small township stretched before us. "How far as we from the camp?" I asked. "About five miles."

"Here's where I get out!" I exclaimed. "Five miles is just about my limit."

"Go to the police station," said the man. "If the horses came this way they'd have to pass through the railway gates." "I shall," I said.

He reined in the horse with a loud, "Whoa!" and I climbed down. I reached up and shook his hand. "I enjoyed that ride," I said. "Thanks a lot." "It's good to talk," he said, smiling. "You'll find your horses all right, don't WOITY."

He drove away and I walked over to the police station where a tall officer with both arms stretched above his head as an accompaniment to a mighty yawn, greeted me from a doorway. "What can I do for you?"

His face was still moulded into the footprints of his yawn, and he adjusted it slowly as if loath to part with a pleasant languor.

"I've lost two horses," I said. "I'm camped five miles out and they wandered off in the night. They're hobbled."

"Soldiers," he pronounced cryptical-

"Soldiers?" "They ride them out to the camp and leave them there. Sometime they ride cows. They lead the cow and take it in turns to sit on it."

-"H'm," I murmured. "I's 'h'm' all right."

It appeared that I was camped midway between a railway station and a military camp. | Soldiers returning rom leave were in the habit of using any wandering stock to save them a walk.

The policeman promised to make enquiries and I left him standing at the doorway in the epning stages of another stretch

At first it was good swinging along the road. The surface offered a perfect grip for rubber crutch tips and I didn't have to concentrate on walking. I could look at the trees. They joined hands above the roadway and wove the straight sunbeams into diapers of light.

The road rollicked over hill after hill, challenging me at each crest to chase it to some culminating place of rest beyond a faither rise. But as the morning passed, the trees and road grew tired in the heat. The tainted wind from passing cars fluttered the leaves in a quick agitation then left them dropping beneath a grey coating of dust. In the intervals between cars tney were still and quiet. They were joyous no longer. .

I was tired and my crutches were beginning to chafe my armpits. I changed my gait from a canter to a pace-only people who walk on

I sat down on a log and flapped my arms like a rooster crowing so that cool air would soothe my armoits. I held my soaked shirt into pyramids. of air and explored my armpits with troubled fingers. The skin was broken. This was no good. My evening wolks with Kim would be painful for a week - a most depressing thought.

I drew faces in the dust with my finger then stood up and started thumbing for a ride.

This is the most unproductive employment known to man. You gaze towards the approaching car with a look in which charm, trustworthiness. and honesty of purpose are mixed with your best smile. You, frown after the retreating car with an expression that is a mixture of anger, chagrin and bitterness.

I continued walking till the hum of an approaching car inspired me to go through it all again.

Near the caravan I attempted a last weary gesture at an approaching Austin, and the driver pulled up. I climbed in, and round the next bend climbed out again,

"How lucky you were to get a ride home," said Olive.

Next day I went to the nearest northern town and notified the police there. In three days they found the horses - eight miles away. It was night when we were informed of their whereabouts. A policeman called in a car and drove us out to the spot where they were last seen. The soldiers were not to blame after all.

OBSESSION "THE DEVELOPMENT of a persecurtion complex from a childhood fantasy to a fixed idea in manhood' is how Nesta Pain, a BBC produceri who specialises in scientific themes, describes her latest production, 'Life History of a Delusion. William Clegg is the central figure, and his obsession is clocks—an obsession that began in his boyhood as a fantaly, and became, by the time he reached manhood, a set of systemised delusions. The part of Clegg as a boy is played by David Spenser, and, as a man, by Edward Chapman. In this radio study, Miss Pain has had the help of Alexander Kennedy, Professor of Psychological Medicine at Durham University; he speaks at the end of the programme. Listeners to the Eastern Service can hear this leature today at 14.30 GMT. ULSTER PLAY

AN IR. H PLAY, a product of the Ulster Group Theatre, will be broadcast by the BBC this week in the General Overseas Service on Monday at 08.15 and Wednesday at 13.15. 'The Singing Bird' is its title and it is described as ta story of travelling tinkers," which sounds Irish enough. The playwright is Joseph Tomelty, one of Ireland's most distinguished actors and the author of a number of successful stage plays and of many short stories.

NONAGENARIAN WRITER

THIS WEEK'S 'From the Third Programme' item is an appreciation of the work of Dr. Edith Oenone Somer-· ville, novelist, artist, and author (in collaboration with the late Martin Ross') of 'Some Experiences, of an Irish R.M.' and other classics of Irish life. She recently celebrated her ninetieth birthday. The talk will be given by her nephew, Nevill Coghill, who is already well known to Eastern listeners as a broadcaster on literary subjects. (Eastern Service on Monday at 14:30). LAMBETH CONFERENCE

A TALK on the historical background of the Lambeth Conference, which begins on July 1, will be given in the General Overseas' Service on Sunday at 02.45 and 07.45, by the Rt. Rev. J. C. Wand, D.D., Bishop of London.

The first Lambeth Conference held in 1867 was quite & small affair. Since then the Anglican Communion has expanded enormously and has become in itself an international communion. Bishop Wand will cover the main developments between Lambeth 1867 and Lambeth 1948, and will also talk about other conferences of significance during that period. Bishop Wand held many high offices in the church before succeeding Dr. Fisher as Bishop of London.

QUASI - apologia

IN writing these weekly notes, it is occasionally disturbing to think that they contain many expressions of opinion of statements of my own likes and dislikes bound up with more general facts and impressions. It is, I think, inevitable that this should be so. since, however, rigid and inflexible may be the intention to adhere to a strictly impersonal scheme, sooner or later, the personal element is bound to intrude.

WERE the subject of these notes economics, politics, or ornithology, bed-rock facts could be used, or accepted principles stated without equivocation. This is not to imply that such matters are not susceptible to a personal interpretation; it would indeed be difficult to quote a subject more subject to the expression of personal opinion than politics. Nevertheless, in the realms of music, I think it is true to say that one cannot be completely dispassionate, however, strict the writer's intention may be. Every piece of music heard conjures a different picture in the mind-a different impression is left with one person than is the case with another, even though all other things be equal.

FOR this reason, then, I make no apology for the inclusion of my own opinions. I recall Voltaire's famous dictum—the finest exposition of democracy I know. In talking with one his bitterest critics, Voltaire said "My friend, I utterly disagree with what you say; I defend with my life your right to say it." This, then, must be the excuse, if excuse be needed; at the same time, however, it is to be hoped that readers of these notes will not feel too hardly of me or that I shall be regarded as a stubborn dictator whose opinions valueless or otherwise -are thrust willy-willy down the reluctant throats of those who choose to read this page.

SUNDAY NIGHT "PROM"

AS always, this is one of the most intriguing of the week's offerings by ZBW, and tonight is no exception to this general rule.

Consider for a moment the bill-of-·Iare:

1. Sonata in G. Major-Bach

(Played by the Moyse Trio) 2. Concerto in F. Minor. Opus 21. Chopin

(Soloist-Alfred | Cortot) 3. Symphony in B. Flat Major-Chausson.

What can be said or written of Bach that has not been said or written before, and by many worthier pens than mine?

I recall a very fine book on Bach by an author whose name escapes me momentarily, published under the arresting title of "Gentlemen! Old Bach is here."

IT seems that Bach was a prime favourite at the Concert of King Frederick of Prussia. | Often he was summoned by royal decree to appear there, where he both performed himself or conducted the Court Orchestra. On the occasion of his first visit, Bach arrived tired and dust-laden with the long journey. On learning of his arrival, the Emperor Frederick-himself no mean musician-announced his arrival thus informally, "Gentlemen! Old Bach is here." Thus the story goes, and it seems to me there is the ring of truth about it.

BACH, wrote so much music-all of it very lovely — that it seems invidious to single out any particular composition for especial mention. Chorals, Preludes, Concertos, Fugues, Fantasias,—all flowed from his inspired pen in a never-ending stream of mighty music. Bach of course, came of the old hard school of classic masters. Raised and nurtured in surroundings where daily praise to the Almighty was a matter of course, it is only natural to find that the majority of Bach's music should be influenced by or dedicated for use in non-secular surrounding. The sonorous dignity of his organ preludes and

Contributed By "MUSETTA"

Fugues can be meant only for the organ, made even nobler by the music which Bach wrote for that majestic instrument.

TO Bach, I think, must go the credit for laying the foundation stones of musical architecture as yet undreamed of. Vivaldi, Correlli; Scarlatti and others had done much to improve things, but Bach—and of course his great contemporary, Handel-was the first classicist to infuse both theory. purity and melody into one unit. So devoted was Bach to his art, that, although he had written much music, he was 41 years old before he first published any of his compositions. His works were obviously such as not tobe "raised from the heats of youth or the vapours of wine."

OF all composers, Bach is doubtless one who repays most of all for close intimate study. His "Well-Tempered Klavier" Suite is and must surely be a delight to all pianists, and to hear this music at its finest, one must hear Wanda Landowska's recordings (on the harpsichord) for H.M.V. lists. Such works lose something in their transcription for the modern pianoforte, an indefinable quality is lost which only the virginals or harpsichord can truly impart.

THE Chopin Concerts is assured of success by the presence of Alfred Cortot as soloist. This great French planist has identified himself with Chopin's works as no other since de Pachmann died, and left the world the poorer, for all his eccentricities.

Chopin, unhappily, never captured the complete art of scoring for the orchestra, so that, although his concertos are favoured by pianists for the solomotive alone, they do not rank as his best or most characteristic compositions: It is curious that Chopin, who could write music for the piano so as to give it the richest contrasts, could never make the orchestra-with its greater capabilities of orchestration substitute for the piano!

CHAUSSAN is an interesting choice for the third and last item of the Prom. This little known French composer was a pupil of Cesar Franck and a contemporary of Brahms. He died in 1899 at the age of forty-four, but not before he had left some delightful plano and violin music. It is conjectural what greater fame he would have achieved if he had lived longer.

TUESDAY'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERT

TUESDAY of this week is to be a Brahms' night, which description sounds like a reference to the Proms as we knew them in England, when the late Sir Henry Wood presided over this feast of music.

The programme promised comprises: "Tragic" Overture.

2. Symphony No. 3 in F. Major. Hungarian Waltzes,

I referred to Brahms in these notes a week or two ago, and must be careful therefore, to avoid a charge of repetition. Brahms wrote only 4 symphonies in his life-time (1833-1897) and although sketches of his first symphony can be traced; about 1858, he was a mature man and musician before it finally reached fruition. I emphosised before that the characteristic of Brahms was | "purity"-I cannot think of a better description to underline the common factor existing in all his music. Many developments and much so-called progress had taken (and was taking); place in Brahms' life-time, not all of it for good, unfortunately.

HE was susceptible to the temptation of large and unwieldy orchestras (to which temptation Berlioz succumbed) and also to the chance that he might have sacrificed form for effect. Brahms, however, devoutly eschewed such evils, and continued to uphold the standard which he had set himself, "music for it's own sake", to the eternal prestige of himself and the cause of music |in general.

Portions of his 3rd Symphony have been described as "gloomy and austere." Gloomy, possibly, in the melody of the second movement, austere even, in that the whole symphony adheres rigidly to a strict classical form. But none can deny the beauty of the music. which lis representative of Brahms at his elegiae best. 🕟

THURSDAY_BRITISH CONCERT HALL

THIS series continues, when Byrd and Elgar are the featured composers.

William Byrd must rank as one of the finest of the early Elizabethan musicians, taking a well-merited niche in the Hall of Fame beside Purcell. Gibbons, Cooper, Tallis and Arne. Much of his music—as it had to be was written for religious use, but it is refreshing to find him featured in this series.

Elgar is represented by his Violin Concerto. This lovely work ranks with the Beethoven and Mendlessohn Concertos as some of the greatest music ever written for this most expressive of all instruments. On its first hearing at the Albert Hall (when, if I remember Menuhin was soloist) some critics carped at what was termed its inordinate length. Such criticism is, surely, unfounded since a composer is master of the moment and only he knows what he feels and what he has. to say.

Be that as it may, this Concerto is one which reveals new beauty at every listening. It has now come to be regarded as an unqualified masterpiece, which, perforce, is to be included in every virtuoso's repertoire. Those who do not know it would be well advised to listen to it, for it is surely one of the loveliest compositions that the masterly pen of Elgar has ever scored.

READING through these notes, I see that music has again been the exclusive theme, Variety, as such, being conspicious by its absence. I make no excuse for this since music must be the main subject always on which this article is built. My only wish is that some readers may be sufficiently interested to join issue with me when they disagree, with any of my opinions and or inferences, _

Health Page Blood Transfusion In Britain BY REX MOORFOOT

The se of blood transfusions in British hospitals has been widely extended as a result of research during recent years, and the need for bloods whether natural or synthetic, is still very great. Its use is no longer contined solely to cases of injury. It is now extensively used in maternity work, during and after surgical operations, and in the treatment of many other medical conditions.

When a person suffers a severe loss of blood the circulation is rendered so sluggish that if an anaesthetic were given, or an operation performed, the result would be death from heart failure. So before a surgeon operates, he has to make sure that the circulation is restored both in volume and quality.

Of these two conditions, the more important is that the volume of blood in the body should be brought up to normal. After this the quality of the blood—that is, its content of oxygen-carrying haemoglobin, which gives blood its red colour—needs to be restored, at least in part, whenever an operation is to be undertaken.

- Natural blood fulfils both these conditions, but natural blood can be stored for only four weeks, despite the intensive research during the recent war to preserve it for a longer time by refrigeration and other methods. It is, in fact, a great achievement to keep it as long as this. But the need for refrigeration and the short storage period are serious drawbacks in certain circumstances.

In consequence, much work has been done in an attempt to find a blood substitute which could be preserved for longer than four weeks. Pectin, the ingredient in jam-making, and isingglass, the egg preserver, were found to be quite useful, but were not as satisfactory as human plasma—that is, natural blood from which the corpuscies have been extracted. Attempts to purify animal plasma for human use have so far been unsuelessful.

The standard product now used, especially in tropical countries, is human plasma dried by a low-temperature, low-pressure- process, which enables it to be kept for an indefinite period without the necessity for refrigeration. For transfusion purposes, this dried plasma requires only to be reconstituted with sterile distilled water just before use. The resulting fluid is excellent for restoring blood volume to a patient, but, if the blood loss is great, or if the operation is severe, then the plasma, because it has no oxygen-carrying power, needs to be supplemented by a proportion of natural blood.

New Substitute

It is as a new, substitute for this human plasma that dextran has been developed. Dextran. was first used successfully in Sweden during the war, and at Birmingham Jniversity two British scientists, Sir Walter Haworth and Professor Maurice Stacey, have done much fundamental work in this country. Tests carried out on animals have shown that dextran can do the work of blood plasma with no ill-effects on the human body. An experimental plant has already been set up to make dextran by the action of bacteria on sugar; but further tests are still being done on the substitute at the Lister Institute in London.

The Ministry of Health, which organises the Blood Transfusion Service on a national scale in Britain, recently stated that dextran still has to undergo exhaustive tests which will occupy about two years. It will probably be a valuable, additional transfusion fluid, but both blood and plasma will still be wanted, so that blood donors will always be needed. In England, a great campaign was launched last year to appeal for more donors to give their blood.

Of course, it is well known that, so far as natural, blood is concerned, the human race is divided into four main groups depending upon an inherited factor present in the red corpuscles. When a transfusion is made. it is necessary to ensure that the inherited factor in the corpuscles of the blood which is being transfused is not incompatible with factors which may be present in the blood of the patient. Human, blood corpuscles contain other factors also inherited which may give rise to trouble if many blood transfusions have to be given to one and the same patient. But no such difficulties arise when nothing more than plasma is transused, and so dextran should be free from these added complications.

To Control Bleeding

Other new discoveries of blood products are still being made. A special foam, made from blood plasma, can

The Secret Of The Cure Of Anaemia

At a meeting of the Biochemical Society at Oxford recently, Dr. E. Lester Smith, senior biochemist at Glaxo Laboratories, announced that he had been successful in isolating the once unknown factor which, in liver extracts, is responsible for relieving Addisonian pernicious anaemia.

Ever since, 22 years ago, two American doctors, Murphy and Minot, discovered that the daily consumption of half a pound of raw or lightly cooked liver saved the life of a patient suffering from pernicious anaemia, and commercial firms began the production of liver extracts, scientists have been searching for the precise curative agent. Now, almost simultaneously, two research teams, one at Greenford and the other in the U.S.A., have announced the elusive factor has been found.

Dr. Smith began this search ten years ago. At first work progressed slowly and during the war, when Dr. Smith transferred to penicillin research, the task was carried on by colleagues Hurran, who is now in New Zealand, Emery and Parker. It has been in the last two years that the work has leapt ahead. Dr. Smith recently discovered that the patent factor in the liver was a red substance more powerful than any known vitamin or hormone, and was active against pernicious anaemia in the minute dose of 1/200,000 of an ounce. But Dr. Smith was not satisfied, and went on purifying the substance until it was 30 times more pure than the original.

His greatest triumph came on the afternoon of May 20 when he found that the once-clusive red crystals lay beneath his microscope. It is estimated that no less than ten tons of liver will be needed to produce a quarter of a gram of the crystals. A dose of one two millionth of an ounce is likely to be sufficient for the patient—a dose practically unparalleled by any other biological substance known to man.

At present the discovery is being regarded as a scientific discovery rather than an immediate commercial possibility. Dr. Smith says, "I have had letters from all over the world asking for supplies of this pure antipernicious anaemia factor, but unfortunately we have had to disappoint all these sufferers. At the moment all we have to show after enormous labour is a few specks of ruby coloured dust. It will be some time yet before we can make it in sufficient quantity for sale. However, the position is not really so bad as it sounds, because this factor is present in minute, but adequate, amounts in the liver extracts already on the market. shall of course try to discover the constitution of this substance. That will be very difficult; first, because it is a large molecule; and secondly because we may have to work up a hundred tons or so of liver to get enough material for our research. Then we shall try to synthesise it; and if we are successful, there is the prospect of much cheaper supplies for use in medicine."

be used to control bleeding in various operations when tying blood vessels is not advisable. This is of great value in surgery of the brain and of the spinal cord, where nerve cells, if destroyed, do not grow again.

Another extract from plasma is used in skin grafting, while yet another has been of value in combating such diseases as measles. So the need to find satisfactory substitutes for natural blood is urgent; for, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Health said recently, "Transfusion is now an essential part of our health services; every day it is saving lives."

Hope For One Currency For All Germany: No Berlin Change Yet

Frankfurt, June 18. The long-awaited currency reform in the three Western Zones of Germany will start on Sunday—but not in the non-Soviet sectors in Berlin—the British, French and American authorities announced to a tense Germany tonight.

In preparations, for the exchange of old money in circulation and bank, accounts; the old money now in the Western Zones will be turned in or registered by June 26. All money not turned in or registered by then will become worthless.

The conversion rate will be announced later, but a hint is given in the fact that a devaluation of stamps and small change—up to one mark is fixed at the rate of one-tenth of their old

The proclamation, the first of three trizonal currency laws framed on the basis of the sixpower Western Germany plans drawn up in London, provides: 1.--Every West Zone German will receive 60 new Deutsche marks for 60 of the old currency to tide him over the interim period pending final conversion.

Observers said the reform appeared the most drastic as well as the simplest measure of its kind in postwar Europe. Its two purposes are to restore a proper reintion between money and available goods and more immediately to force producers and traders with goods in stock to bring out their hoards.

GLAMOUR FOR COTTON

This year it's not a case of pickin' cotton - it's which cotton to pick. Cotton has graduated—with flying colours.

Cotton has been "re-dis-

Pique Pecks

Next for choice is a cotton of a very different school, white pique, the crispest of all cottons, with its look of clean purity. Pique calls for simple, clear , dut lines, and folds rather than gathers, with a subtle touch of the 'tallored' about it.

One model, ideal for pique, has three folds around the shoulders, crossing over at the front in a doubt-breasted effect and finished with four dramatic gold buttons. The skirt is a simple circular cut, flaring out from a neat waist. This is the dress for the wonian who aims at a distinguished simplicity, Another charming frock for evening partles is made from cotton georgetts, printed in pale cafe au-lait on a white ground ...a 'pew colour combination for the peach skinned brunette. This is a simple style too, the bodice boned and strapless, with stiffened frills, like fluted scashells, standing up across the top edge. The skirt is ballet length, full gathered from the waist. Wear with this a modern choker of old lamber beads or a jade pendant.

Creaseless

Your cotton evening frock, if you are travelling, will be most useful made from printed seersucker, which is quite creaseless and does not need ironing,...in fact it never should be ironed. Allover flower designs are the best choice, and are to be obtained in all manner of delightful colour combinations.

One unusual model, printed in shades of browns, greens and flame, on white, is cut with the effective drawstring neckline and the shortest of puff sleeves. The swathed midriff band ties into a huge bow at the back and the wide skirt is -gathered tightly into the lower edge of the band.

For a cotton evening gown in the grand manner, I would choose a fine chambray in a pastel shade of pink or mauve, with a boned, strapless bodice finished with a skin with, say, soft analibruth, Acno should be treated by a bow at the centre front. The skirt using a light circular motion skin specialist, but in mild cases, would be completely circular and which will not stretch the skin much good can be done at home just - above - the - ankle length, unduly.
